I am anxiously waiting for the approach of those happy days when I shall be sitting in a meditative posture somewhere on the Himālayan range and the banks of the sacred Ganges, practising the process of Yoga or mental abstraction, fully absorbed in the immediate meditation of the Supreme Being, and wholly entranced into ecstatic sleep, quite incognizant of what is passing around me, so that the old antelopes will be gently rubbing their itching horns against my senseless body without the least apprehension of my sentient state. 1. A riddle of Bahirālāpa-variety.

Śikhariṇī metre.

Where do sages pure in mind and free from worry perform penance ? (Śikhariṇi : on a hill). Who is the beloved wife of the enemy of the demons [Viṣṇu] ? (Ī : Lakṣmī). Tell me, which is the well-composed metre having nine short and eight long syllables and which is loved by poets ? (Śikhariṇī : the metre of that name). (S. B. Nair).

Śikhariṇī metre.

The body is almost decayed, wealth is notoriously fickle, residence in the house is a bondage, and the pleasure of union has become as insipid as separation ; hence abandon all your pride, both of mind and action and resort to the feet of Viṣṇu that bring uninterrupted peace and supreme bliss. (S. B. Nair).

ABBREVIATIONS-CUM-BIBLIOGRAPHY

Note : Volume I of the Mahā-subhāṣita-saṁgraha contains the main list of Abbreviations used in the Project. Three subsequent lists of additional Abbreviations are prefixed to Volumes II, III and IV. To Volume VI, after making some additions, a consolidated list of the same is appended. But while working on the present Volume, the editor felt the need of further enlarging and revising the said consolidated Abbreviations and, therefore, at the risk of reiteration, towards making the reference easier as also the Volume self-sufficient, a complete list of Abbreviations, in its revised and enlarged form, is appended hereto, which may well serve the purpose of Bibliography also.

APPENDIX II

INDEX OF AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

Note :—In the following pages, the authors and sources of the individual verses included in this Volume VII are recorded. The minimum necessary information about the authors and sources are also given. Where, however, such information has already been given in earlier volumes, only references thereto, if necessary, are provided in this Volume. To this is added a reference from A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions (DCA), 2 vols., by Ludwik Sternbach, (Otto Harrassowitz, Wiesbaden 1978–80), where details of anthological and inscriptional poets have been fully recorded ; and are also added references from Catalogus Catalogorum (CC), 3 parts, by Th. Aufrecht (reprint edn. Wiebaden 1962) and New Catalogus Catalogorum (NCC), 9 parts (still incomplete), V. Raghavan, K. K. Raja, and others (Madras). For references to the texts used, see "Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography" given in the preceding pages (3633—3710) of the present volume (VII) as Appendix I.

At the end of each source are given the serial numbers of the verses incorporated in the present Volume, being Nos. 11492–13018. The abbreviations used for the several texts are given within brackets, following the relevant sources. While verse-numbers given as such refer to the sources from which the verses are directly extracted, verse-numbers given within brackets refer to the authors and sources which are known indirectly or which are mentioned in the Volume only for the purpose of comparison.

SURABHI. No information. F. W. Thomas (Kav p. 115) suggested that Surabhi may be identical with Surabhicūla, but that is very unlikely as the latter is quoted only in anthologies from the 15th century and later works, while the Surabhi is mostly quoted in the two oldest anthologies. Terminus ad quem beginning of the 12th century, for verses attributed to him are quoted in SkV. For further details, see DCA Vol. 2, no. 1824; $CC_1$ 739.

APPENDIX IV

INDEX OF SANSKRIT METRES

Note : The following metres, other than Anuṣṭubh (=Śloka), have been used in the verses included in the present Volume. These metres have been classified into four groups : A. Akṣara-cchandas (Sama-catuṣpadī) or metres having an equal set of syllables in all the four quarters ; B. Akṣara-cchandas (Ardhasama-catuṣpadī) or metres having an equal set of syllables in the alternate quarters ; C. Akṣara-cchandas (Viṣama-catuṣpadī) or metres having different set of syllables in all the four quaters ; D. Mātrā-cchandas or metres governed by the number of syllabic instants (mātrā-s) in the quarters ; and E. Irregular or Unidentified.

The metres in group A are listed according to the number of syllables to a quarter ; metres in groups B and D are quoted in the Devanāgarī alphabetical order. No instances of group C occur in this Volume. Referential numbers to the metrically irregular or unidentified verses are given in italics.

SOME REVIEWS OF VOLUME VI

Note : The reviews of Volume VI of the Maha-Subhaṣita-Saṁgraha appeared in a good many research journals and other popular periodicals of different languages. Towards getting an idea of the wide range of scholarly recognition of the Project, as suggested by the senior Russian Orientalist Professor Igor D. Serebryakov on his recent visit to the Institute, in the following pages, some six such Reviews in English published in the standard Research Journals of India and abroad are reproduced, as they are, without any change or deletion.

1. REVIEW published in the Journal of the American Oriental Society (JAOS), Volume 110, Number 3 (July-September, 1990) : pp. 539-40, New Haven (U. S. A).

It is about a decade since the latest review of – volume III – of Sternbach's Mahāsubhāṣitasaṃgraha appeared in the Journal. Reviews of the first three volumes, all by Professor Pratap Bandyopadhyay of the University of Burdwan, succeeded each other in rapid succession. The review of volume I appeared in JAOS 96 (1976) : 314-16, immediately following B.A. van Nooten's review of Sternbach's Subhāṣita, Gnomic and Didactic Literature (vol. IV. 2. 1 of Jan Gonda's A History of Indian Literature). Volume II was reviewed in JAOS 98 (1978) : 546-48, and volume III in JAOS 100 (1980) : 42-43. Since volumes IV and V were not reviewed, I will use the review of volume VI as an opportunity to make a brief status questions of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṃgraha generally.

Those who participated in the 29th International Congress of Orientalists – the last to be held under that name – will remember the following resolution : "The XXIXth International Congress of Orientalists, held in Paris on the 21st July, 1973, considers the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṃgraha as an important publication and requests that this publication be speedily brought to an end and be published by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute as quickly as possible."

The purpose of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṃgraha is to bring together, in a single alphabetical sequence, all the verses quoted in the existing subhāṣitasaṃgrahas as well as other wise sayings throughout Sanskrit literature, both in India itself and in sources from Greater India. It was planned that the entire collection would be published in about twenty volumes, with additional volumes for verses that might come to the compiler's attention after the printing had started. All in all, up to and including volume VI, more than eleven thousand subhāṣitas—occasionally there is more than one entry to a single number—have been published, as follows :

|---|---|---|---|---|
| vol. | I | (1974) | nos. 1-1873 | a—anve |
| vol. | II | (1976) | nos. 1874-4208 | apaḥ—ahni |
| vol. | III | (1977) | nos. 4209-6285 | āṃ jñānaṃ—īha dhanasya |
| vol. | IV | (1980) | nos. 6286-8264 | u—au |
| vol. | V | (1981) | nos. 8265-9979 | ka—kā |
| vol. | VI | (1987) | nos. 9980-11491 | kiṃ—kai |

Each entry includes, in addition to the text of the subhāṣita, a list of the sources in which it appears, together with the variant readings which these sources exhibit, and an English translation. The translations are by different hands. Whenever a good translation was available, it was reprinted, with the name of the translator in brackets. Some of the verses Sternbach translated himself. The remaining ones are the work of—now, the late—A. A. Ramanathan of Madras. Each volume also contains at least three appendices, of authors and sources, of Sanskrit metres, and a subject index.

Ludwik Sternbach (born in Krakow, December 12, 1909) died in Paris on March 25, 1981. Volume V contains a brief In Memoriam, by K. V. Sarma. Before his death Sternbach set up the "Dr. Ludwik Sternbach Foundation," to be administered by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute at Hoshiarpur for the continuation of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṃgraha. We may, therefore, expect that the staff of the V.V.R.I. will continue to be involved in the enterprise, as they have been right from the beginning. Although Sternbach himself was the indefatigable collector of the subhāṣita, as early as 1966 he conceived the idea of involving S. Bhaskaran Nair in the editorial work. From volume II onward the name of Bhaskaran Nair, at present the Director of the Institute, indeed appears on the title page as the editor. The same remained true for volumes III and IV. Bhaskaran Nair in turn acknowledged the advice he received from his predecessor, Professor K.V. Sarma, throughout the work on the first four volumes. Although Sarma retired from the Directorship of the Institute at the beginning of 1980, he returned to Hoshiarpur to edit volume V. Volume VI is again edited by Bhaskaran Nair.

A feature of Volume VI that will be much appreciated by the users of the first six volumes is an appendix titled "Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography," which consolidates the several lists of abbreviations spread over the earlier volumes, Sternbach's own compilation and numbering of subhāṣitas halted with number 10579, which appears in volume VI and was also the highest number referred to in his A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets Quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions (2 vols., Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1978-80). The editor informs us that materials for another three or four volumes have been partly collected ; he does not tell us whether an effort will be made to expand the existing materials up to the projected number of twenty volumes. Whatever the decision may be, we are once again grateful to the V.V.R. Institute in general and Professor Bhaskaran Nair in particular for providing us with another beautifully edited and produced volume.

2. REVIEW published in the Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute (ABORI), Volume LXX (1989) : pp. 353-54, Poona.

This is the sixth volume of a gigantic undertaking on the Sanskrit Subhāṣitas or wise sayings, which presents their comprehensive catalogue, index and edition, all in one. The speedy completion and publication of the work—a "much enlarged and modernised Indische Sprüche (of Otto Böhtlingk)"—was recommended with approbation by the International Congress of Orientalists at its 29th Session held in Paris in July, 1973. The publication of this priceless project was entrusted by Professor Ludwik Sternbach (12-12-1909—25-3-1981) to the V.V.R.I. (Hoshiarpur) through Dr. Ludwik Sternbach Foundation ; and it is to the credit of the Institute which, since then, has successively brought out six out of the contemplated twenty volumes of it, while maintaining a high standard in editing which is characteristic of the publications of the Institute.

The present volume incorporates, 1,512 verses (with their initials from कि up to कैं), thus bringing their total so far to 11,491, which is besides 77 inserted verses. The editing proceeds along the pattern set in earlier volumes : with the text given in the Devanāgarī, a record of variant readings and of sources wherever available, and an English translation done at expert hands. This is followed by four very useful Appendices (Indices), recording : Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography (76 pages), Authors and Sources of the verses (56 pp.), Sanskrit Metres used in them (8 pp.), and the subjects treated in them (78 pp.). Then is appended a small Addenda and Corrigenda.

It is not quite surprising that Professor Sternbach, the veritable Subhāṣita-Maharṣi, combining in himself prodigious learning as well as simplicity and humanism, (—the reviewer has treasured nostalgic memories of his brief meeting with the scholar at the Twenty-ninth Session of the All-India Oriental Conference held in Pune in June 1978—), should have generously entrusted the papers containing his life-time researches for publication to the care of the V.V.R. Institute, and, there too, to Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair, the Director-Professor of the V. V. R. I., with "full confidence in him" and "High esteem for his work." As can be evident on any page of the volumes of the work edited by Professor Nair including the present one, he has amply justified the trust reposed in him by the late scholar, and what the editor has remarked, in his Preface to Vol. V, about the painstaking labour put in by the compiler towards the compilation (that it is "better visualised than stated"), applies in equal measure to his own editing of the Volume(s). Attention in this connexion may be drawn to only one, the last Appendix, viz., the Subject Index. What a mine of information, under topics and sub-topics, it provides to the reader on a variety of small and big aspects of Indian culture which are touched in these Subhāṣitas !

With excellence in printing also (—just randomly, the name of the author at no. 10640, appearing to be one of a Maharashtrian, is probably better read, and printed, as Viṭhobā Aṇṇā, on pages 2817, 3129—), the Volume makes an excellent work of reference for scholars and inquisitive public alike, who would naturally wish god-speed to work on the subsequent Volumes.

3. REVIEW published in the Journal of the Ganganatha Jha Kendriya Sanskrit Vidyapeetha, Volume XLII, Parts 1-4 (January-December, 1986, issued in 1989) : pp. 306-09, Allahabad—2.

Sanskrit literature is a rich repository of wise sayings and adages occasioned by the multifarious incidents and situations in life portrayed in various forms and genres thereof since very early times. And there have been a number of attempts at collecting such sayings, finely rounded off in metrical form, in anthologies right from about the 10th century A.D., the more notable amongst them being the anonymous Kavīndravacana - samuccaya, Vallabhadeva's Subhāṣitāvali, Śrīdharadāsa's Saduktikarṇāmṛta and Jalhaṇa's Sūktimuktāvalī. The value of these anthologies as rich collections of erotic, gnomic, didactic, devotional and descriptive verses is indeed immense. Apart from their great literary value, their place as an eloquent and forceful vehicle of the Indian cultural tradition through the ages is unique.

The tradition of such anthologies has continued down to our own time, the latest, and undoubtedly the most comprehensive, of these being the Mahāsubhāṣita-saṃgraha, projected, by its compiler, the late Dr. Ludwik Sternbach (1909-1981) as a gigantic work comprising twenty volumes and embodying therein the wit and wisdom of India's glorious past as reflected in the wise sayings and entertaining verses contained in the vast expanse of Sanskrit literature available, in metrical form, in India as also in Greater India comprising the countries such as Tibet, Burma, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, etc., where the culture and civilization of India, along with the literature of the land, had spread in early times. The work when completed would certainly be a landmark in the history of Sanskrit studies in modern times with a particular reference to the field of Subhaṣita section of Sanskrit literature.

The Publication of this monumental work was undertaken, in 1972, by the V. V. Research Institute, Hoshiarpur, and the onerous task of editing it was entrusted, in deference to the wishes of the compiler, to Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair. Five volumes of this work, first four (1974, 1976, 1977 & 1980) edited by Prof. Nair and the fifth (1981) by Prof. K. V. Sarma, have already appeared. These volumes, taken together, contain 9979 verses in 2662 pages, while the volume under review contains, in 592 pages, further 1512 verses, raising their total number to 11491 (excluding the inserted additional verses) and taking them up to Kai in the Devanāgarī alphabetical order.

The verses incorporated in this volume, as in earlier ones, have been critically edited with detailed references and text-comparative annotations. The edited text of each verse is followed by its English translation attempted by eminent scholars. A good number of verses, of which no satisfactory translation was available, have been translated by the editor himself. Again, the editor has added critical notes on metre and other poetical elements contained in or displayed by each verse, and has made, wherever deemed necessary, textual emendations. The laudatory words, expressed by Dr. L. Sternbach in appreciation of the high quality of the editing of the second volume of the work done by Prof. Nair and recorded in his Foreword (p. x) by Prof. Jagannath Agrawal, apply in full measure to the present volume also.

Following the general plan for the entire work, the volume contains four appendices. The first of these gives a consolidated list of abbreviations used in this as well as in the earlier volumes. The list thus makes the present volume self-sufficient and facilitates the task of referencing. Again, including as it does, the full bibliographical detail of the works listed, numbering well over 1000, it serves the additional purpose of bibliography. The second appendix gives an index of authors and sources of the individual verses included in the volume with necessary information about them along with comprehensive references to other works and catalogues and with cross-references wherever these were needed. The third appendix provides an index of Sanskrit metres used in the verses included in the volume. The last appendix is in the form of subject index which lists, in Roman alphabetical order, important words denoting ideas and institutions and various items of social and cultural importance, culled from the English rendering of the verses, along with brief explanatory and contextual remarks wherever necessary.

These indices enhance the value of the work as a reference-book in the field of the Subhāṣita-section of Sanskrit literature. The work, with reference, of course, to its volumes that have already appeared, has been highly admired by eminent Indologists such as Prof. Jan Gonda, of Utrecht (Holland), Prof. K. K. Raja of Madras, Prof. P. K. Narayana Pillai of Trivandrum, Professor Satya Vrat Shastri of Delhi, Prof. P. Bandyopadhyaya of Burdwan (West Bengal), Professor P. L. Bhargava of Jaipur and Prof. Jagannath Agrawal of Chandigarh, to mention only a few of them. The last-named scholar has, in his Foreword to the present volume, made a particular reference to the Editor's meticulous observance of the principles of textual criticism, coupled with his command of English, which has made the volume a fine literary achievement worthy of the eminence of the compiler, Prof. L. Sternbach, and the international name and fame of the Institute which has undertaken the publication of this work under its Vishveshvaranand Indological Series.

It is to be hoped that the remaining volumes of the work would also be brought out in a similarly finished form and in a quicker succession by the Institute under the stewardship of its Director, Prof. Nair, who is critically editing and annotating it in a manner that eminently befits the importance of this unique academic project.

4. REVIEW published in the Journal of the Oriental Institute, M. S. University of Baroda, Vadodara, Volume XLIII, Nos. 3-4, March-June 1994 : pp. 258-59.

The Mahāsubhaṣitasaṅgraha is a voluminous monumental project aiming at collecting, critically editing, translating and presenting in a systematic form in Devanāgarī alphabetical order, the metrical subhāṣitas, found in the extensive field of Sanskrit Literature and also those from Greater India i.e. from countries like Tibet, Burma, Ceylon, Thailand, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, etc. The pioneering work of compilation was done by the late Dr. Ludwik Sternbach, which was later on authenticated and supplemented by Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair by critically editing each subhāṣita, translating it into English and systematically presenting the huge project-material in the form of several volumes. The late Prof. Sternbach, Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair and the V. V. R. I. form as it were a triveṇīsaṅgama for the publication of the valuable treasure of ancient Indian wisdom,

Under the scholarly editorship of Prof. Nair, the five great volumes of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha have already been published. This is the sixth one, incorporating subhāṣitas nos. 9980-11491 (i e. 1512 verses+77 extra) in its 592 pages. Prof. Nair has dedicated this volume to the memory of the late Dr. Ludwik Sternbach in a very fine verse in mālinī metre, which is followed by a Foreword by Prof. Jagannath Agrawal, informing us about the project and acumen of Prof. Nair in editing these volumes. The volume begins with the verse no. 9980 starting with Kiṁ Kaṇṭakaiḥ, and ends with the verse no. 11491, which begins with Kaścid etc. A systematic method is followed in presenting the collected material. Each verse is first printed in Devanāgarī. Then its source or sources are noted. The variants (if any) are exhaustively collected and systematically presented for each verse. It is followed by lucid English translation mostly by Prof. Nair. (Sometimes also by Dr. K.V. Sarma and the late Prof. A. A. Ramanathan. Sometimes also reproduced from works of other scholars with due acknowledgement of it by mentioning names of respective scholars at the end of the translation). The translation is succeeded by some important critical notes.

The volumes also incorporate at the end four useful appendices, Appendix I contains Abbreviations-cum-exhaustive bibliography of numerous primary and secondary works, utilized for the project, (pp. 3019-3094). Appendix II, incorporates in it an Index of authors and sources of individual verses, (pp. 3095-3150). Appendix III presents an Index of Sanskrit metres, utilized in each verse (pp. 3151-3158). The last IVth Appendix envisages the subject-Index for the volume.

The stupendous project is an outstanding, novel and unique contribution to the Sanskrit studies and Indology and its volumes have become a valuable, indispensable and veritable treasure for libraries of scholars of Sanskrit and Indology. The greatest zeal, incessant endeavour and enormous intellectual exercise of scholars are reflected in this gigantic and arduous task. Both the scholars and the Institute deserve our hearty congratulations for their success and we look forward to see the early publication of the remaining volumes.

5. REVIEW published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society, Volume XXIX, Number 4 (1987) : pp. 104-05, Calcutta.

The first five volumes of the Maha-subhaṣita-saṁgraha edited by the renowned scholar Ludwik Sternbach have already earned sufficient fame to lend dignity to this prestigious series, so that even after the demise of Prof. Sternbach, it commands respect and due scholarly recognition. Besides, the present volume (VI) is edited by the able scholar Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair trained in scrupulous and meticulous scholarly work by the late Dr. Vishva Bandhu, the founder-Director of the V. V. R. Institute of Hoshiarpur. He is an eminently suitable choice for carrying on the unfinished task left behind by Prof. Sternbach. Not only has he discharged the duty painstakingly and with great care but he also had the privilege of studying the methodology of the first five volumes edited by Prof. Sternbach himself.

The result is this splendid volume, the sixth in the series of twenty contemplated volumes. In point of methodology, there is no deviation, so the continuity and uniformity of the format is preserved. This volume contains the subhāṣita verses beginning with 'Kiṁ' and ending with 'Kai'; one wonders if in the remaining fourteen volumes the rest of the alphabet can be covered. The pattern of presentation of the well-known, oft-quoted verses is : after the serial number, the verse is quoted, then the source from which it is quoted is mentioned in abbreviation, followed by the mention of its occurrence in other texts ; then variant readings are given against the number of the feet where they occur in the verse ; then the metre is named, followed by a very close and readable translation, with the name of the author of the translation. Variant versions of whole verses with more than one foot of variations are separately entered. Where more than one stanzas are quoted consecutively, the numbers are given accordingly ; where proper names occur they are explained in footnotes.

At the end of the text, there are four sections of an appendix : the first one gives 'abbreviation-cum-bibliography', where, against the abbreviated title of a work is given the full title, with the editions and translations used in this volume pointing to other allied titles for cross-reference. In the second section of the appendix 'authors and sources', we have the title of the text from where the verses are quoted with the serial numbers of all the verses quoted from it. This is amazingly accurate and full. The third appendix is an 'index of metres' where after the name of the metre we have its prosodic character in short-and-long feet break-up, followed by the number of syllables to a quarter, the serial number of the verse or verses in that metre and its prosodic variants with the serial number of the verse in that particular variant form. Where no such verse occurs in that variant, it is stated so. And finally, the fourth appendix is a subject index—a very full and elaborately well-classified division of the subject and their finer shades entered separately—followed by the serial number(s) of verse(s) under that heading. The appendices enhance the value of the volume immensely and render the volume an extremely dependable handbook of references for chasing stray verses by author, first foot, metre, or subject. A vast mass of stray verses which have gained popularity in any way can be easily traced in these volumes.

There are a few printing errors which one hopes will be removed in the next edition. No doubt the series deserves the fame it has earned and readers of Sanskrit poetry will have unqualified praise for this endeavour and its spectacular success.

6. REVIEW published in the Journal of the Octa Orientalia, Academiae Scientiarum, HUNGARICAE (OAH), Vol. XLIII, Fasciculi 1 : pp. 143-44, Akadémiai, Kiadô, Budapest (Hungary), 1989.

It is now six years since volume five of the series was published. This short delay was due to the sad demise of Prof. Sternbach, the initiator, compiler and general editor of this magnificent undertaking. He completed the compilation and enumeration of verses, numbered to 10579. The remainder of the volume was prepared by Prof. Bhaskaran Nair and his assistant Dr. Parveen Singh Rana. Prof. Bhaskaran Nair also translated a good deal of subhaṣitas into English.

Volume six was prepared on the principles of edition laid down by Prof. Sternbach.[1] The editors adhered to the same high standard concerning textual criticism and the apparatus criticus.

The subhaṣitas as masterpieces of Sanskrit poetry and reflect various aspects of Indian culture.

Not fewer than 51 stanzas are connected with the kula, i.e. the family and things such as morality, and behaviour, etc., closely related to it.

Verse 10839 reads :

kulamārgaparaḥ śreṣṭhaḥ pitroḥ śuśrūṣakaḥ śuciḥ śāstramārgānusārī ca dharmiṣṭho dharmamāpnuyāt "That noble person who adheres to the customs of his family, that man of pure conduct who attends to the needs of his parents and the man who follows the path chalked out by scripture—all these follow the right path and will obtain Dharma (religious merit)." (A. A. Ramanathan).

Agriculture (kṛṣi) being the main form of livelihood touched the imagination of poets and often appeared in popular sayings, 15 verses are listed on this topic.

Verse 11241 E reads :

kṛṣivṛṣṭisamāyogād dṛśyante phalasiddhayaḥ / tāstu kāle pradṛśyante naivākāle kathaṁcana / tasmāt sadaiva kartavyaṁ sadharmaṁ pauruṣaṁ naraiḥ //. "Good crops are obtained by a combination of efficient farming and good rains ; they too can be obtained only in the proper season, and never are they seen in unseasonable time. Hence it is that men should ever perform proper actions putting forth their manliness." (A. A. Ramanathan).

A touch of devotion to the personal God can be felt in the verses beginning with the name of Kṛṣṇa. Verse 11255 reads :

kṛṣṇa kṛṣṇa parameśvara viṣṇo
pāhi pāhi bhavakardamamadhye /

1. Cf. my review on Mahā-subhaṣita-saṁgraha II—III in : OAH XXXII/ 2 (1979), 251-253.

kāmalobhamadamatsarakopair
bādhyamānamaniśaṁ kṛpaṇaṁ mām ||

"Oh Lord Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa, Supreme Lord, O Viṣṇu, guard me, protect me, fallen in the midst of the mire of worldly life and rendered ever miserable by being bound by passion, greed, pride, envy and anger." (A.A. Ramanathan).

The four appendices containing a detailed bibliography and index of authors and sources of the individual verses, an index of Sanskrit metres and a general index make the volume easily manageable. It is also remarkable that the general bibliography has been re-done in this volume. All in all, the whole work is to be distinguished for its compactness and steady philological accuracy.

One may feel the need of few critical remarks only. Since the collection of subhaṣitas was compiled from the entire Sanskrit literature, the editors might have put in the following proverb-like verse of the Kṛṣiparāśara :

kṛṣirdhanyā kṛṣirmedhyā jantūnāṁ jīvanaṁ kṛṣiḥ| hiṁsādidoṣayukto 'pi mucyate'tithipūjanāt ||

"Blessed is agriculture, holy is agriculture, and agriculture is the life of creatures. One, though tainted with blemish like jealousy, is redeemed by honouring guests." (G. P. Majumdar and S. Ch. Banerji).[2]

The uneven standard of the available English translations of the single verses were a major challenge for the editors. They did their best, however, sometimes they made an unhappy choice : in addition to A. A. Ramanathan's fine and reliable renderings, there are the not genuine translations by Powys Mathers (see verses from the Kuṭṭanīmata).

There are few things to be corrected or completed in the bibliography. The full title of CKI (p. 3029) reads correctly thus : J. Klatt, De trecentis Cāṇakyae poetae Indici sententiis. Dissertatio Halis Saxonum. Berolini 1873. Instead of a reference to the secondary literature, I would prefer giving the data of the edition of the Yuktikalpataru itself.[3]

Misprints are at a minimum. I must emend śāstramārganusārī for śāstra-mārganusāri (v. 10839) or anuṣṭup for anuṣṭubh (p. 3151).

The value of the Mahā-subhāṣita-saṁgraha has been immeasurable. It is hoped that this well-presented and finely produced volume will be followed by the subsequent ones in the near future.

FOREWORD

There is hardly any Sanskrit work which is not embellished by wise sayings popularly known as Subhāṣitas. In fact Sanskrit Literature is a vast treasure-house of wise sayings. Even the tough discourses of the śāstric treatises are enlivened when embedded with Subhāṣitas. True to their name, the wise sayings or subhāṣitas, represent the unique wisdom, which, when properly imbided, serves as our true guide and friend to the tricky journey of life. These depict our culture and experiences of life. Couched in beautiful language and expression, they really delight the heart and soul of the Sahṛdayas. These provide a window to the socio cultural saga of our country over the centuries. The wealth of their contents is enclothed in innumerable beliefs and traditions, joys and sorrows, achievements and failures, religion and philosophy.

Apart from the well known compilations like the Subhāṣitāvalī of Vallabhadeva, the Sūktimuktāvali of Jalhana, the Saduktikarṇāmṛta of Śrīdharadāsa, the Subhaṣitaratnakoṣa of Vidyākara, the Subhāṣitaratna-bhāṇḍāgāra of Nārāyaṇa Rāma Ācārya and an anonymous Kavindravacanasamuccaya of the past, there are recent collections of them like the Saṁskṛtasūktīratnākara of Ramji Upadhyaya, the Nītimuktāvalī of Ravindra Kumar Seth and Devakanya Arya, the Viśvasaṁskṛta-sūktikoṣa, in three volumes, of Lalitaprabhasāgara, the Sūktiratnāvali of Kulamaṇi Mishra, the Subhāṣita-Sāhasri of Dr. Satyavrat Shastri and Kathāsaritsāgara Kī Sūktiyān of the writer of these lines. Since none of the earlier anthologies was exhaustive enough to cover the entire Sanskrit literature. Prof. Ludwik Sternbach thought of compiling all the subhāṣitas in a work, a mahāsaṅgraha in the real sense of the term, the biggest ever collection of the Sanskrit subhāṣitas.

The Mahāsubhāṣitasaṁgraha is a monumental project aimed at collecting, critically editing, translating and presenting in a systematic form in Devanāgarī alphabetical order, the metrical Subhāṣitas, found in the extensive field of Sanskrit Literature and also those from Greater India i. e. from countries like Tibet, Burma, Ceylon, Thailand, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, etc. Thus, the purpose of the Mahāsubāṣitasaṁgraha is to bring together, in alphabetical sequence, all the verses quoted in the existing subhāṣitasaṁgrahas as well as otherwise sayings scattered throughout Sanskrit literature, both in India and in sources from Greater India.

The stupendous project is an outstanding contribution to the Sanskrit studies and Indology. The volumes issued so far have become avaluable and veritable treasure for scholars of Sanskrit and Indology. The great zeal, untiring endeavour and enormous intellectual exercise of scholars are reflected in this gigantic and arduous task undertaken by the V. V. R. I., Hoshiarpur. A lamp lights another lamp, only if it continues to burn its own flame. The V. V. R. I. keeping the flame burning. Both the scholars and the Institute deserve hearty congratulations for their success !

The Subhāṣitas are the repository of wisdom and knowledge. The intellectual skills of the poets are here portrayed in variegated hues, mirroring an holistic development. They echo the message that life throbs in oneness. Everything intermingles, melts, merges into the other—the boundary lost. We all take different paths in life, no matter where we go, we take a little of each other everywhere.

These wonderful collections of wise sayings enable us to face the challenges of life with courage and conviction. Invested with profound knowledge and sterling character, these serve to improve the health of the society. These make us realize our intellectual, spiritual, philosophical and social potential. Their purpose is not only to educate the reader but to refine him also. They turn mirrors into windows. They are Truthful, Blissful and Beautiful सत्यं शिवं सुन्दरम् । At times these inspire us to turn challenges into opportunities and enable us to move further to reach our goal undettered, putting endeavour in our right hand and victory in the left.

In this age of Liberalisation, Privatisation and Globalisation they preserve the ancient cultural heritage of the country. They teach us the secrets to do common things uncommonly, enable us to use discontentment as a stepping stone to progress and make us think positive with faith and confidence. The essence of thought and culture is assimilated in them. These portray the common experiences of life in an uncommon manner, thereby reflecting the morality and ethics, philosophy and spirituality, politics and history, culture and religion. More importantly, they are like a beacon in the dark. They represent the essence of various experiences, challenges, troubles that one undergoes in one's march to progress. They infact are equipped with the trappings of a worthy guru to shape the future generations. They appear to be the Gangotri of our cultural stream.

The present volume of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha the eighth in the series, which I have the privilege to introduce to the scholarly community, comprises 1635 stanzas from Serial Numbers 13019 to 14653. The methodology followed in editing the volume sticks to the critical norms applied to the earlier volumes. The text of the verses is followed by references to its source / sources, metre, brief explanatory notes and English translation to each verse. The appendices at the end, undoubtedly contribute to a better understanding of the varied sources, authors and metres of the stanzas included in the volume. The editor has done a commendable job in giving us a critically edited and well-produced volume.

I am confident that this volume, like its preceding counterparts, will be warmly welcomed by the scholarly community and lay readership. It is sure to provide them undiluted aesthetic pleasure.

PREFACE

The best of a group or a class that, by its very nature, lent grace to the whole or contributed to its wealth was aptly termed as 'gem' (ratnam) by the ancients. A stanza or a part thereof which is likewise distinguished by uncommon poetic excellence, imparts aesthetic pleasure to the connoisseur and has didactic overtones, and thereby stands out from the common mass, is given the happy name of subhāṣita, a wise saying. In the poetic parlance subhāṣita is but another name of 'gem'. Well has it been said by the poet :

पृथिव्यां त्रीणि रत्नानि जलम् अन्नं सुभाषितम् ।
मूढैः पाषाणखण्डेषु रत्नसंज्ञा विधीयते ॥

A subhāṣita, when recited or heard, soothes the mind, comforts the heart and invariably heightens one's awareness / knowledge in its wide ramifications. The tiny jar of subhāṣita overflows with an ocean of rasa. By their inherent genius, the subhāṣitas encompass a variety of subjects and evoke acceptance by their manifold virtues. A large mass of the old wise-sayings is doubtless attributed to the ancient poets, both known and unknown. But there is a sizable segment of the subhāṣitas that has been handed down, over the ages, by oral transmission, and thereby tends to suffer unwarranted interpolations. Even the well-equipped scholars are unable to identify their authors with certainty. They continue to pass on as respectable but anonymous adages, with everybody floating his own surmise about their authors and sources.

The corpus of subhāṣitas, written down the ages, is virtually infinite. The lovely subhāṣitas that one encounters in the vast domain of literature, both sacred and profane, concern themselves with a spectrum of subjects, voice the ethics of the day, reflect the ideals and norms that guided the society in various vicissitudes, and thus mirror in brief the contemporary culture of the respective milieus.

It is hard to pinpoint what precisely prompted the emergence of the Subhaṣitas in Sanskrit. Being the summum bonum of all knowledge, human and divine, the Vedas may well be accepted as the fountain-head of the Sanskrit Subhaṣitas. The Vedic literature abounds in unending strings of subhāṣitas of various hues and worth. The Subhaṣita-saṅgrahas ( collections of wise sayings ), assiduously compiled by competent authors to underscore their strong potential in entertaining the cultured reader, and steering him to safe harbours in the trying hours, seem to have led to the birth of independent genre of the subhāṣita-literature. The saṅgrahas are invested with considerable historical importance. They embody the writings of a number of such ancient authors as well, who are mere names to us. It is seldom that they or their writings find mentions elsewhere. Some of the śāstric works (lakṣaṇa-granthas), and commentaries of the ancient masters are known to preserve certain excerpts from their writings. The fascination for collecting the subhaṣitas in book-form happily grew stronger over the years, and subsequently struck deep roots.

Of the known Subhaṣita-saṅgrahas, the Kavīndra-samuccaya of the unknown author, is the earliest. The richness of its contents and its antiquity combine to lend it considerable significance. It is followed by Vākpatirāja's Subhaṣitasandoha which consists of 922 wise sayings, classified into thirty two prakaraṇas. Written in the thirteenth century, the Saduktikarṇāmṛta of Śrīdharadāsa, purports to be a unique collection. Jalhaṇa's Sūktimuktāvalī, though a slim volume, is invested with great charm. Distinguished by a wealth of contents and written in a lucid style, the Śārṅgadharapaddhati holds the pride of place in the annals of the saṅgrahas. Its 4689 verses make it a hefty volume. The Subhaṣitāvali of Vallabhadeva also engages attention. Prof. Bōhtlingks Indische Sprüche (Bhāratīya-sūktayaḥ) makes a departure from the rut of the earlier collections. It is comprised of thousand verses, drawn from the earlier available saṅgrahas, which are accompanied by a readable German translation by the author himself. Of the other available collections Vishal Vijay's

Subhāṣitaratnākara, Sāyaṇa's Sudhānidhi, Sakalakīrti's Subhāṣitāvalī, Peḍḍibhaṭṭa's Sūktivāridhi, Subhāṣita-ratnāvalī of Hari, Vedāntadeśika's Subhāṣitanīvī, Kashi Nath Sharma's Subhāṣitaratna - bhāṇḍāgāra, Sūktāvalī of Bhimarāja-Satyanārāyaṇa, Sūktisaṅgraha of Kashi Nath, Harihara's Padyāmṛtataraṅgiṇī, Subhāṣita-sudhābhaṇḍāgāra edited by Kaviratna Śivadatta, Vidyādhara's Ratnakośa, Rūpa Goswami's Padyāvalī, Subhāṣita-sahasrī edited by Dr. Satya Vrat Shastri, are some of the other important collections of Subhāṣitas that are available in print or are preserved in the MS. form. Like the preceding saṅgrahas they too are marked by rich contents and serve as worthy guides to good conduct.

A perceptive study of the corpus of the Subhāṣita-saṅgrahas led the late Professor Ludwik Sternbach to conclude that a new multi-volume saṅgraha was still a desideratum. The collection, as he visualised it, should include the invaluable treasure of wise-sayings scattered in the earlier saṅgrahas, both published and unpublished, and in works on such diverse disciplines as Arthaśāstra and medicine, which contain a wealth of verses that have merit place in the saṅgrahas but have been unjustly denied. He set upon the task in right earnest to give shape to the idea. He patiently culled a vast mass of subhāṣitas, not only from the published collections but from a number of manuscripts deposited with various libraries and museums as well. Not only that, he painstakingly prepared tables of the variant readings thrown up by different editions / versions of the respective works, and opted in the text for the reading he found most tenable, on critical evaluation, relegating others to the footnotes under various verses. It is a measure of his zeal that, besides others, he admitted to his magnum opus such verses as well, as are descriptive in character, highlight human beauties, behaviour of birds and beasts in various situations and deal with omens of different hues. A sizable number of verses, which though shorn of poetic beauties, have been included in the collection because of the judicious application of the figures of speech. Some of the verses included therein can hardly claim to be subhāṣitas, but have been accommodated because the editor (author) finds some latent charm in them, howsoever evasive that may be. With a view to bring the text within the reach of the non-Sanskritic readership, Prof. Sternbach decided to append English translation to the verses. He reproduced the translation of such verses as had been rendered into English by competent Scholars in their editions of the various texts or elsewhere. He continued with translating the rest till his end.

Prof. Sternbach meticulously edited some of the proposed volumes, prepared their transcripts, and with a view to have them published met Dr. Vishva Bandhu, the founder-Director of the Institute. He apprised the Acharya of the details of the gigantic project that was visualised to run into twenty sizable volumes. Dr. Vishva Bandhu was quick to grasp the importance and magnitude of the work. In view of its suitability and wide dimensions, he consented to publish it from the Institute, and appropriately named it Mahasubhaṣita-saṅgraha.

It is to be noted that of the twenty proposed volumes of the Mahasubhaṣita-saṅgraha, Dr. Sternbach, in his life time, could collect material for ten volumes only. Beginning with the Devanagarī letter अ (A), they span verses upto दुर्वृत्तेऽप्यकुलीने तु ( Śukranīti, 4. 7. 201 ). The present volume, eighth in the Series, contains 1635 verses, from गुच्छान् पौष्पान् (13019) to छेद्यं चन्दन········(14653).

As mentioned in the preceding volumes, five volumes of the Mahasubhaṣita-Saṅgraha were published in the life-time of Prof. Sternbach. He used to send to the institute the duly edited text with English translation, Foot Notes and Appendices from his home in Europe. The scholars at the institute subjected the transcript to rigorous scrutiny and made changes wherever necessary. It was then that the Volumes went to the press. It is worthwhile to recall that the first five volumes were brought out by the institute within the space of mere eight years, from 1974 to 1981. This was the time when Prof. Sternbach was alive. Six years intervened before the the sixth volume could be published. Volume Seven took an inordinately long time of thirteen years to come out, under the editorship of Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair, the Director of the institute. After Prof. Nair retired from the service of the institute, I edited the Sanskrit text of the eighth volume with the critical apparatus followed in preparing the earlier volumes. The English translation was done by Sh. Shambhu Dutt Joshi, the Joint Director of the institute. In deference to the wishes of the Executive Board of the institute, I contacted several eminent scholars like Dr. Satya Vrat Shastri, Dr K. V. Sarma and Dr. S. N. Bhardwaj for revising the English translation. They expressed their inability to undertake the task for one reason or the other. At the instance of Dr. Satya Vrat Shastri, I ultimately approached Dr. Satya Vrat Varma, Former Principal and a noted writer and contributor On our request he consented to translate the text de novo. The English translation printed in the volume was done, by and large, by Dr. Varma. The translation of some of the verses done by other scholars, has been printed under their names. Dr. Satya Vrat occasionally found it necessary to translate some such verses also as had been translated earlier by scholars of repute. That accounts for two translations of some of the subhāṣitas. The name of the translators of some of the verses, however, could not be identified

Of the verses included in the volume, the number of verse that is marked by crisp proverb or adage, is printed without the asterisk mark. The verse that is invested with poetic excellence or some other distinction has its number printed with one asterisk mark. Such verses as have been included in the present volume by virtue of their extraordinary poetic excellence or some such other reason, though they were in the earlier volumes in different garb, are printed with two asterisk marks on their respective numbers (Page 4030 No. 13523).

Not unlike in the preceding volumes, the subhaṣitas have been meticulously edited and printed in the volume in the order of the Devanagarı letters. The source of the verse has been mentioned under the category (अ); the verse that has been reproduced from other work or is quoted in other work is noted under (आ) and verses that are drawn from other sources find mention under (इ). The variant readings, if any, in the four quarters of a verse are sequentially noted under (a), (b), (c) and (d) that, like the aforesaid categories, follow the printed text of the verse.

The volume carries four Appendices at the end. They are as follows :

(i) Revised and enlarged Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography.

(ii) Authors and Sources.

(iii) Index of Sanskrit metres other than Anuṣṭup.

(iv) Subject Index. It includes subjects referred to in the Verses and ancillary subjects drawn from English translation.

It is my moral duty to express gratitude to my colleagues in the institute and other friends and scholars who helped me in bringing out the volume First of all, I tender homage to the sacred memory of Acharya Vishva Bandhu Ji whose blessings continue to spur us in our literary ventures. This institute itself is an abiding testimony to his wide erudition and vision. I also remember with fondness Dr. Ludwik Sternbach whose Mahasubhaṣita-saṅgraha epitomises his life-long commitment to learning, and stands out as a unique treasure of Sanskrit subhaṣitas I am indebted, on counts more than one, to Prof. Bhaskaran Nair, the former Director of the institute, who edited the seventh voume with great ability. It was he who initiated me into the nuances of the art of editing ancient texts. To him I offer my grateful thanks.

I express my gratitude to Dr. (Mrs) Kamal Anand, Principal, Aditi College, University of Delhi for the promptness with which she consented to introduce the Volume to the scholarly world by contributing Foreward to it. As a noted author and receipient of many awards and honours, she was well equipped to perform the task with credit

Thanks are due to Dr. Satya Vrat Varma. In a rare display of magnanimity, he acceded to my request to translate the volume into English and to read the final proof-sheets. He did the job with zeal and devotion. His translation has the merit of unravelling the true import of the text. It is neither a literal translation nor a free rendering. It is true to its name (anuvada). It voices the spirit of the original in lucid phraseology, without straying from the text.

Prof. T. S. Bindra deserves my sincere thanks and blessings. He has worked closely with me in editing the volume, correcting the proof-sheets and preparing the Subject Index. Dr. Dev Raj Sharma has been a pillar of strength to me. It is the unstinted help of these two colleagues that has been instrumental in bringing out the volume in time. Sh. Shrikant Office Supdt. of the Institute, Sh. Rakesh Sharma, the Manager of the Printing Press of the Institute and his colleagues Sh. Om Prakash Thekedar and Rajendra Prasad carried out the printing of the volume with great care and sincerity. May God bless them.

This colourful bouquet of Mahasubaṣita - saṅgrah, lovingly strung by a galaxy of devoted scholars, is gratefully dedicated to the sacred memory of Acharya Vishva Bandhu Ji. May his spirit continue to enlighten our path.*

Lakṣmī, the mistress of kings, who dallies on the back of her elephant, creates violent desires and spoils the high-minded.

For whomsoever she has first shown fondness, he is (sure to be) brought into distress by her in end, just as by low attachment,

How could she, who grew up in the ocean in company with the fickle courtesans of heaven, learn the conduct of a (woman faithfully) attached to a single man.

She, who is devoid of affection, has never followed kings when they had to proceed on the way to the other world, without provisions for the journey or attendants, though she may have been intimately connected (with them) for a long time. (M. A. Stein).

INDEX OF AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

Note :—In the following pages, the authors and sources of the individual verses included in this Volume VIII are recorded. The minimum necessary information about the authors and sources are also given. Where, however, such information has already been given in earlier volumes, only references thereto, if necessary, are provided in this Volume. To this is added a reference from A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions (DCA), 2 Vols., by Ludwik Sternbach, (Otto Harrassowitz, Wiesbaden 1978–80), where details of anthological and inscriptional poets have been fully recorded; and are also added references from Catalogus Catalogorum (CC), 3 parts, by Th. Aufrecht (reprint edn. Wiebaden 1962) and New Catalogus Catalogorum (NCC), 9 parts (still incomplete), V. Raghavan, K. K. Raja and others (Madras). For references to the texts used, see "Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography" given in the preceding pages (4317-78) of the present volume (VIII) as Appendix I.

At the end of each source are given the serial numbers of the verses appeared in the present Volume being Nos. 13019-14653. The abbreviations used for the several texts are given within brackets, following the relevant sources. While verse-numbers given as such refer to the sources from which the verses are directly extracted, verse-numbers given within brackets refer to the authors and sources which are known indirectly.

The Work Contemplated

The Mahāsubhāṣitasaṁgraha project is the second big project after the famed Vedic Word-Concordance project undertaken by the V.V. Research Institute. In its preparation, an earnest endeavour has been made to collect, classify, edit critically with detailed references and text-comparative data, translate into English, arrange and present in the Devanāgarī alphabetical order the wise sayings of metrical composition and the entertaining verses of poetic fascination in Sanskrit as available in India and also in 'Greater India' comprising the countries like Tibet, Sri Lanka, Burma, Thailand, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, etc. where Sanskrit literature along with Indian civilization and culture had spread in early times. Further a complete list of Bibliography and various Indices appended to the volumes enhance the reference-value of the work as a literary source in the domain of socio-cultural history of India. The project when completed would certainly be a landmark in the history of Sanskrit studies in modern times with a particular reference to the field of Subhāṣita section of Sanskrit literature.

The Work Completed

Out of the expected 20 volumes, the Institute, had brought out Vol. I (pp. 592) in 1974, Vol. II (pp. 616) in 1976, Vol. III (pp. 576) in 1977, Vol IV (pp. 584) in 1980, Vol. V (pp. 510) in 1981, Vol. VI (pp. 592) in 1987 and Vol. VII (pp. 688) in 1999. The present volume VIII incorporates in 758 pages, 1635 verses raising the total number of verses so far treated in the first eight volumes to 14653 covering all the verses beginning from "अ" to "छे" in the Devanāgarī alphabetical order.

The Compiler

Born in 1909 at Krakow (Poland), brought up and educated there, Professor Ludwik Sternbach was an Indologist of international repute and prolific author of a number of books and research papers. He served, with distinction, the Jegellonian University at Krakow (1937-38); the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay (1940-46); the UNO at Paris, Geneva and New York (1947-70); the University of Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris (1970-72); and the Collége de France, Paris (1972-76). He was the Founder-Secretary-General of the International Association of Sanskrit Studies. He passed away, at Paris, on 25.03.1981. He remained unmarried throughout his life. (For further details, see 'In Memoriam' prefixed to Volume V, pp. xi-xiii).
